During the last ten years there has been an increasing awareness of the effects of trauma in people's lives. It is now generally accepted that there is a relationship between childhood trauma and mental health problems and addictions. Yet many women, who have suffered abuse as children, still find it difficult to get the help they require to be able to overcome their problems and lead lives that are not dominated by the effects of their trauma. Often these are women who have had a series of contacts with the helping professions, where they have been diagnosed with a range of psychaitric diagnoses and addictions, and received services that have not helped them.

This workshop will explain the core principles of working with this client group. In particular it will focus on clients who have complex presentations, including self harm, suicidal behaviour, dissociation, drug and alcohol abuse and eating disorders. The workshop will provide a framework to guide ways of intervening in these complex situations, and outline specific interventions and techniques that can support the client and assist in recovery.

Bronwyn Cintio is a social worker in private practice providing counselling and professional supervision to individuals and agencies. Bronwyn has had more than twenty-five years' experience working in a variety of settings with children, adolescents and families and survivors of abuse and trauma.
