This workshop provides you with the opportunity to reflect, consider and construct clinical supervision within a competency-based framework that scaffolds effective, relevant and growth opportunities for both supervisees and supervisors. You will be encouraged to discuss methods, tools and resources that improves engagement, efficacy and outcomes for the people you support.

Clinical supervision is an essential part of effective service delivery and accountable clinical work. Current approaches to supervision have recognised the value to the individual, industry and practice standards when the model of supervision encompasses some key components: observation, reflective practice, corrective processes, outcomes measurement and targeted strategies tailored to coach and strengthen the clinical skills of supervisees. Quality and rigor in the provision of clinical supervision is essential for accountable practice and improved outcomes for people seeking support.

Topics covered in this one-day workshop will include:

- Optimising outcomes for the supervisee – knowing what you don't know
- Enhancing competency through specific methods in supervision
- Providing feedback and identifying supervisee blind spots
- Observation and experiential practice – using digital feedback tools
- Looking ahead and shaping supervision using the empirical lens
