Learning outcomes

Social workers and other allied health professionals work in complex, challenging and often stressful work environments. We all deserve quality supervision that helps us to:

- Manage the demanding situations we face everyday
- Prevent build-up of stress and possible burnout
- Keep growing and developing throughout our career
- Stay in touch with our core professional ethics and
- Provide the best possible service to our clients.

New and experienced supervisors who want to encourage reflection and professional growth in their supervisees will benefit from this course.

By participating you will learn:

- How to establish and maintain a trusting, productive supervisory relationship
- The value and purpose of the individually negotiated supervision agreement
- How to structure a supervisory discussion to promote learning and growth
- The supervisor's "toolbox" and how to choose your tools to most benefit the supervisee
- How to model and promote reflective practice with supervisees
- How to engage supervisees in the supervision process
- The "5-Eyed Supervisee"
- How to deal with ethical issues and dilemmas in your supervisees' practice

It is essential that you attend all 3 days of this course as each day builds on the last
